Artist Writes Book on “Practicing LOVE” and Dream Comes True

He starts his Practicing LOVE journey and helps a stranger. Twenty years later, the stranger reaches out to say thank you—and it leads to the ownership of gallery.

New York, NY — There’s romance love and there’s the universal love that keeps us connected. Artist Ray Rosario’s debut book Practicing LOVE is a philosophical journey into the kind of love that uplifts our hearts; rising above pettiness, fear, and insecurity. Practicing LOVE is a journey that turns into a lifestyle. Simple acts of kindness without expectations, enriches the soul and returns in unexpected ways.

Based on this principle, Ray gifted a painting to a stranger 20 years ago, a woman who he met by chance at. They connected and never saw each other again—for 20 years! She recently reached out to thank him again for the painting and invited him to visit her. During that visit, Ray sees a vacant historic building and tells her about it. She made one phone call—and the owner, who after meeting Ray, decided to support his dreams of owning his own art gallery. One act of LOVE led to owning a ten thousand square foot historic building to create his dream. All based on the principles in Practicing LOVE. A view of his website will reveal 22 years of using art for humanitarian causes.

In the book, there is testimony of a woman crediting Ray for saving her life due to a kind gesture he showed her. “Practicing LOVE helps us work on increasing the love we have for ourselves while connecting with others in a healthy and positive manner. However, this LOVE must be genuine” says the author.
